

TWENTIETH CENTURY ART MUSIC

ORCHESTRAL & PIANO THE PLEASURE DOME OF KUBLA KHAN

MUSIC BACKGROUND:

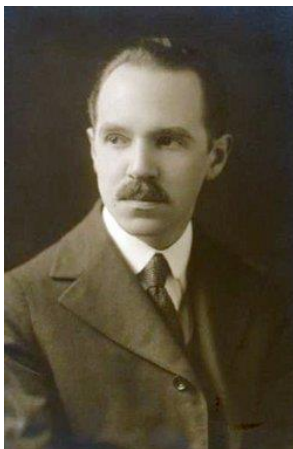

A symphonic poem inspired by Samuel T. Coleridge's poem, In Xandu Did Kubla Khan. The flyleaf of the score bears the following verses –

In Xandu did Kubla Khan
A stately pleasure-dome decree:
Where Alpha, the sacred river, ran
Through caverns measureless to man
Down to the sunless sea.
So twice five miles of fertile ground
With walls and towers were girdled round:
And there were gardens bright
With sinuous rills....
Enfolding sunny spots of greenery....
The shadow of the dome of pleasure
Floated midway on the waves;
Where was heard the mingled measure
From the fountain and the caves.
It was a miracle of rare device
A sunny pleasure-dome with caves of ice!

Samuel T. COLERIDGE

This tone poem, considered Charles Griffes' most substantial large-scale orchestral work, was first introduced on Nov. 28, 1919 by the Boston Symphony under Pierre Monteux. It began as a piano piece written in 1912, but its definitive form is its orchestral version, completed in 1917. The piece "faithfully mirrors the poem's startling juxtapositions of imagery of sunniness and 'caves of ice.' In the music, we perceive both glitter and darkness, stateliness and reverie, languorousness and frenzy. That's a lot for ten minutes of music! In short, it is a seductively lovely piece. It sets interpretational problems for the conductor because of the sheer variety and number of its musical episodes." (Stevenson 2016)

"The Pleasure Dome of Kubla Khan in its original piano incarnation, startlingly different from the orchestral version, is profitably approached on its own terms. It contains some of Griffes' most florid and colorful writing for the instrument. The work is written at a level of difficulty so high that there is ample music for four hands, but some exceptional pianists are able to manage it with two." (Stevenson 2016)

Charles Tomlinson GRIFFES

In the past "if we did get Griffes's orchestral masterwork, The Pleasure-Dome of Kubla Khan, in concerts, it was likely to be with cuts made by Frederick Stock when he conducted the piece in Chicago shortly after the Boston premiere under Monteux. It was with Stock's cuts that the work was initially published, and thus that Eugene Ormandy, back in his Minneapolis days, and Howard Hanson recorded it. Seiji Ozawa restored the cuts when he recorded Kubla Khan and other Griffes works for New World in the mid-1970s; Gerard Schwarz followed suit in Seattle for Delos." (Freed n.d.) Actually the first conductor to restore Stock's cuts was Charles Gerhardt in 1962 (see below CT-PK3).

The original piano score was performed by Michal Lewin and released in 2000 (see below CT-PK7).

With its verses, "caverns measureless to man" and "caves of ice," this poem is strongly cave-inspired. Many cave divers worldwide will remember Sheck Exley's classic, Caverns Measureless to Man, which took its title directly from this poem.

For spoken word recordings of Coleridge's poem go to the section Spoken Word – Adult Fiction – Poetry – English – Kubla Khan.

Notes: The vague, foggy opening passages suggest the sacred river running "through caverns measureless to man down to a sunless sea." The gardens with fountains and "sunny spots of greenery" are suggested. From inside come sounds of dancing and revelry, which increases to a wild climax and then suddenly breaks off. At the end there is a return to the original mood suggestive of the sacred river and the "caves of ice".

Notes: This performance together with Seiji Ozawa's performance with the Boston Symphony in 1976 (see below) were the first complete renderings of the original score that restored the Stock cuts.

Referring to selections on this album – "Two works of Charles Tomlinson Griffes, both slightly retouched by Gerhardt: The White Peacock and The Pleasure-Dome of Kubla Khan, in performances that make competing versions sound prosaic indeed. (R.E.B. 1999)

Another reviewer says – "Like the Coleridge poem which inspired it the work bathes in orientalism. Eros swims languidly among the warm rockpools and Sheherazade sings her seduction again. The music sways and shimmers in fluorescent colours... Hollywood and Hanson both owe Griffes a great deal. The strange tonalities of the closing pages also suggest a debt owed by Bernard Herrmann in the Rosebud sequence of Citizen Kane. (Barnett n.d.)

"In 1960, Gerhardt returned to RCA Victor and, together with Kenneth Wilkinson, produced a series of classical music albums that featured well-known artists for Reader's Digest... By 1964, Gerhardt had assembled, together with Sydney Sax, an orchestra they named the National Philharmonic, which brought together many of the finest musicians in London. With this group, Gerhardt created more than 600 albums for Reader's Digest over the next 12 years." (Tyranny 2016) Several of these with the National Philharmonic Orchestra were classic film scores.
